Arrangement	Alphabetical order by name of circus or last name of correspondent.
Summary	The Tibbals Circus Collection of Greeting Cards holds cards received over the years by Janet and Howard Tibbals as well as cards in the circus collections Howard Tibbals has acquired. The collection consists predominantly of Christmas cards from major 20th century American circuses and New Year's greeting cards with the exception of a Valentine's Day card from the Kenneth Feld family. There are Christmas cards originating from circuses, performers, circus fans and non-circus sources. Some cards include envelopes and handwritten notes. Many of the cards sent by circuses were signed by individual employees of that particular circus, such as the general representative or the advertising manager. Approximately half of the cards have no date. Several incorporate original artwork and designs. Of special interests are the cards illustrated by Bill Ballantine and Roland Butler as well as the outstanding artwork created for Carl Hagenbeck, Clyde Beatty-Cole Bros. Circus and the Ringling Bros and Barnum & Bailey Circus. The collection also contains a scrapbook holding Christmas cards and circus photographs, origin is unknown. Cards with photographs generally have no description.

Historical Note

During the 19th century, many middle class families began using greeting cards as a form of annual communication. These cards were often sent before or during holidays such as Valentine's Day, Christmas, New Year's, and birthdays. Greeting cards were often chromolithographed and were embellished with moveable parts, tassels, and cut out shapes. Greeting cards were also personalized by the sender with handwritten messages. During the 20th century, as disposable income by the middle class in the West began to grow along with workers demanding better conditions and pay, the makers of such elaborate cards declined. In order to keep up with high demands, greeting cards became the typical shape we see today with humorous line drawings or works of art.

Scope and Content Note

The collection was artificially created by Howard Tibbals. The collection holds cards received over the years by Janet and Howard Tibbals as well as cards in the circus collections Tibbals acquired. Materials date primarily from the 1920's through the 1990's. There is one greeting card from Strand, London that dates back to the 1850's.
